Daily sessions run: 11:00–13:00; and 14:00 –16:00
Deadline to register: June 12, 2023 (midnight GMT+3)

Course leaders?
Professor Matthew Daniels, J.D., Ph.D.; Institute of World Politics, Washington DC.

Programme Rationale?
- To train AUTh students in the basic principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.
- To enable AUTh students to engage digital online human rights discourse on current issues.

Students will be asked to create movie reviews and/or video game reviews that communicate Human Right principles to others in the context of entertaining digital video.

Duration and package delivery strategy?
Five days of instruction followed by three packages of online assignments to be completed remotely.

Entry requirements
The Programme accepts applications from third, fourth- and fifth-year students to create a class of fifteen students, maximum. All applications should include a CV, a recent grade report and a brief Cover Letter (one page maximum) explaining the reasons of participation in the program. After the submission of the necessary documentation, all applicants will be reviewed by Professor Daniels and Professor Betty Kaklamanidou. The final selection will be based on the CVs, the Cover Letter, and a possible interview.

Final Award? Digital Human Rights Ambassador Certificate to all who complete course requirements.

Skills to be acquired?
- A knowledge of the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR).
- An ability to apply UDHR principles to contemporary human rights issues.
- The ability to compose scripts that communicate those principles to their peers online.
- The ability to work independently and meet deadlines.
